Pitcher Grimes the Whole Works in Dodgers' Defeat of Hub Braves

Held Boston Batters Down, Fielded Like a Star and Slammed the Ball.

By Richard Freger

THE final score of the second game of the Brooklyn-Boston series now being played at Ebbetts' Field was Grimes 4; Boston 2. Mr. Grimes made four because he was the entire works in the Dodgers' winning. The clever spitballer practically stood the visiting batsmen on their heads allowing but eight scattered hits. In addition to his masterful twirling, Grimes was quite a person with the old whiffle slapping out three hits in as many times as bat. On his first appearance he laid down a sacrifice hit, his second trip produced a single and on his third and fourth appearances at the plate Mr. Grimes slapped two pretty doubles to the outer gardens.

Grimes did not miss a hit though. He demonstrated to the 4,000 or more fans present at Ebbetts' Field that pitching is not all he can do. Grimes had nine fielding chances and made good in eight. He made one error when he dropped Koenig's throw to first on O'Neill's hit to deep first. All in all it was quite a day for Mr. Grimes.

When the two teams lined up for the fray Clarence Mitchell was covering right field in place of Bernie Nease, the sensational rookie who has been playing in fine style. Nease, was outpointed by a bad case of tonsillitis immediately after Sunday's game, and as Uncle Koenig did not want to take any chance on the youngster being laid up for a considerable period he advised Bernie to lay off for a couple of days.

The Braves were the first to score in yesterday's conflict. In the second stanza Walter Cruise sent the ball on a cruise to right for one bag and went to second on Hildebrand's sacrifice. Brockie flied to Myers and when Koenig uncorked a wild pitch Cruise moved to the far corner. He tallied on a hit by Mann. The Braves did not hold their lead for any great time as the Dodgers came right back in their half of the second, tied the score, and made it two better. The three runs were sent in on an error by O'Neill, a single by Miller and a two-bagger by Myers.

The Dodgers, due to their victory, are now tied for second place with

Mogridge and Mays Lose to Red Sox in Hub

BOSTON, April 20.—The Red Sox celebrated Patriots' Day by giving the Yankees two severe drubbings, 6 to 0 in the morning and 3 to 1 in the afternoon, one in memory of Lexington, the other of Concord.

In '75 the Yankees drubbed the Redcoats, but the tables were turned, and the New Yorkers took a sickening plunge down to seventh place in the American League standing.

George Mogridge's left hand curves received a sound whaling in the morning game. In the sixth inning Hooper, McNally, Menosky and Hendrix singled in succession and then Lewis muffed McNally's attempt at a sacrifice fly.

After Foster had fouled out Scott singled, driving in the fourth run of the disastrous inning and Walters hit into a double play. That was enough for Mogridge and McGraw finished out the game.

The Yankees were helpless before Wait Hoy's fine pitching, getting only five hits, two of these being made by Babe Ruth, who helped himself to a line single in the fourth and a slashing two-bagger in the ninth.

There was nobody to drive the big fellow along, however, and he perished on the bases. The crowd gave him an uproarious welcome.

The afternoon game saw the first appearance of Carl Mays in a New York uniform in Boston and his old teammates clubbed him viciously. Peck walked in the first and scored on Wally Pipp's two-base hit and Babe Mousel scored another run in the fourth. Boston scored on Hendrix's base on balls in the second, followed by Scott's double.

But Mays couldn't hold his one-run lead. He was hammered for two tallies in the seventh and gave way to Ernie Shore, another former Red Sox hurler.
